Context: Sub-Saharan Africa comprises 13% of the world’s population, yet two out of three people there lack access to electricity. As a result, economic and social development is delayed. The continent needs investment, technology and know-how. This includes bridging the “skills gap” by training African lawyers with the skills to negotiate complex international transactions to finance energy generation and distribution projects throughout the continent.

Program Objectives:

- To provide 6-8 fellowships over 30 months to highly-qualified African energy lawyers at U.S. law firms to develop world-class skills and experience in energy transactions to be transferred back to the Fellows’ home law firms and colleagues;
- African energy lawyers to gain exposure to U.S. government programs and access to Power Africa’s network of partners in the energy sector;
- To provide trainings by the Fellows upon return to their home countries to other lawyers, including those working in or for African government agencies; and
- To strengthen Power Africa’s private sector partnerships by engaging the Fellows with key private sector partners in the U.S. and Africa.

Program Activities:

- The Vance Center recruits Fellows from leading law firms in Power Africa’s partner countries throughout sub-Saharan Africa;
- The Fellows work for up to a year at U.S. law firms and corporate legal departments as international associates;
- The Fellows interact with Power Africa, other U.S. government agencies, and Congressional staff in Washington, D.C.;
- The Fellows interact with U.S. and African energy companies; and
- The Fellows return to their home countries to help build capacity for negotiating and closing energy transactions.

Program Outcomes:

- The African energy sector attains enhanced human capacity;
- Host U.S. law firms benefit from the perspectives of African energy lawyers and gain exposure to opportunities to strengthen their energy practice and presence on the African continent;
- The alumni network of all Vance Legal Fellows further develops to support this program and contributes to stronger legal capacity targeted to the African energy sector; and
- A spirit of public service and pro bono practice spreads among the African legal profession.
